Q: Can't pass method to new thread: odd behaviour So I am working on a temperature control application, and I have a method (which is called in the main activity) to stop a temperature reading. The problem is when I call it in my new thread (in the constructor) it doesn't stop the reading. Below is a very simple example that illustrates my problem: public class MainActivity extends Activity { public void test() { Log.i("TEST", "test"); } public void onCreate(Bundle icle) { setContentView(R.layout.activity_main); new Thread(new Runnable() { public void run() { test(); } }).start(); } } Output is: I/TEST(1254): test A: It probably works, but I'm not seeing any output. The way that you construct and run your Thread is wrong. It's impossible for the thread to actually do anything in onCreate() because onCreate() is not executed in a different thread, but in the main-thread. The way it should work is like this: public class MainActivity extends Activity { public void test() { Log.i("TEST", "test"); } public void onCreate(Bundle icle) { setContentView(R.layout.activity_main); new Thread(new Runnable() { public void run() { test(); } }).start(); } } What's important here is that you have to make the constructor of the Thread static. If you don't

Q: Given a list, how can I access the last element in the list With the list lst = {a, b, c, d}, lst[[4]] will give d I've tried using lst[[-1]] but this does not work. A: In that question you asked (proving $n+1$ -th element of a list), there is the information that you might use lst[[-1]] to get the $n+1$ -th element in the list. Since lst is a list of the elements in a list (no brackets), you can use elements (-) to get to the elements of the list. So, something like this: lst[[-1]] will get to the last element in the list, a list. Q: PIE в HTML5 Зарегистрированы 2-3 города и есть три разных сайта - сайты.
